

Our cotton crop, with its numerous by-products, now represents an annual value of a billion dollars, which equals the indemnity paid by France to Germany. All of it leaves the farm and enters the markets, and if we should ever have a drought cutting it in half it would depress every financial centre in the civilized world. So, when cotton and corn are combined in one country, a drop of rain there has meaning for everybody.

— Dearest, My sweet—
 I have just received a beautiful mannering of the price of the best quality of domestic milk, and the amount of milk given for the same. I have been very long in coming to you, but I have been so busy in my own household. If I had found that I could not purchase the best milk for my children in getting a half-hundred of the 120 milks per gallon, which is the best thing can be done, equally well by a large manning, and the price of it increase to 250 in the number of milks paid for per hour in the morning, I should be so relieved.
 Such has been my family's affected. Even in the lowest kind of manual labor, such as the making of pizzen, it has been found possible to triple, and even to quadruple, the accomplishment per man. There are not theoretical estimates. They are actual results.

The report of the automobile department of the Secretary of State this month shows a continued increase in the registration of automobiles last year. The total number of registrations minus cancellations and returns is 316,506, while at the month of July the registrations amounted to 310,118.50.

On Tuesday and Wednesday of last week in the town of Fort Fairfield, some of the hardest fought races took place that this county has ever produced. The same horses start here, with additions from across the line and from "down state."

There is no question as to the quality of the sport to be seen at the park with many a live who can say with anything like truthfulness, what horse or what driver will win in several of the races. This applies to the 2.14-2.20-2.22 and other classes. The race for three-year-olds, with five colts, three bred in Arrostook County, the others from across the line, make the field.

The fields will average six or more starters. The track is in perfect shape, the buildings are fresh and clean with paint.

Competent judges have been engaged who will render decisions promptly and fairly to the visitors. Will Miller of Auburn has been engaged to judge the exhibition horses. In all New England no more competent man could be found.

He has been for many years one of the State's largest dealers in strictly high class horses.

H. H. Lee of Augusta starts the races. In next week's issue we will publish a full account of the races, but do not let this statement keep you away. You can't afford to miss your fair.

Brewster's Millions

Soldiers have Houlton theatre goers enjoyed the privilege such as was afforded them last Tuesday evening in the production of the play "Brewster's Millions" dramatized from the book by George Barr McCutcheon. The play was presented by a talented lot of actors.

Louise Nilson, in the title role, carried the honor of the author's idea of a liberal spender.

The scenery was superb and the reproduction of the storm at sea was very realistic, such attempts at stage setting being rarely seen in Houlton.

The audience, though not a large one was a very appreciative one, and Manager French is to be congratulated upon his good fortune in securing this play for his town.

Crop Conditions

Potatoes

The continued favorable weather for the potato crop is having much to do with the promising quality and quantity of the Arrostook County stock and especially that grown around Littleton.

The rust which developed a short time ago is not doing any damage to those fields where Bordeaux has been used, and as this is the only sure preventive practically all those who raise any large amount or those who wish to save their crop have sprayed with this mixture.

Buyers are paying $1.50 per barrel for what stock is coming in, but at this season of the year there are so many other things which must be done that digging has not yet commenced in earnest.

Hay and Grain

The hay crop which early in the season seemed to be light, thickened up very materially and when the curing season was over it was found that the yield was up to the average, and the greater part was secured in fine shape.

The grain harvest is progressing well and the crop is being reaped in fine shape, there being less lodged than in past years. The heads are plump and full and the yield will be up to the average.

The Maine Automobile Association is to send out a request to every one of its 2,000 members to assist in every way in the enforcement of the registration law, and that they promptly report any violation especially of the four matters above mentioned, to Hon. Joseph E. Alexander, Sec. of State, Augusta.

M. A. A.

The Maine Automobile Association decided to get after non-residents operating machines for over 30 days within the State without taking out a license, also against car owners who are operating their machines under last year's licenses and using 1912 number plates, the colors of which are yellow ground and blue letters while the colors for this year are exactly the reverse.

The Association also intends to report all cars using no number plates or substitute plates either painted to resemble the official plate or else cardboard signs. In addition, every effort will be made to ascertain the names of persons operating machines without licenses or who are operating under old certificates.

The Maine Automobile Association is to send out a request to every one of its 2,000 members to assist in every way in the enforcement of the registration law, and that they promptly report any violation especially of the four matters above mentioned, to Hon. Joseph E. Alexander, Sec. of State, Augusta.

Base Ball

Moose 7 Woodmen 3

The Moose team annexed the second game in the series last Wednesday, easily defeating the Woodmen team.

Hart was on the job and pitched one of the best games of the season, being especially effective in tight places. Several times with the bases occupied he retired the side via the "air line."

He was given right edge support, in the 3d inning only three balls were pitched to make all out. Frazer for the Woodmen team struck out 8 men as against 5 for Hart, but was unfortunate in allowing hits, when hits meant scores, in fact the hitting luck was with the Moose team all the way through.

For 6 innings it looked like a shut out for the Woodmen boys, but the fatal 7th brought an unlucky error by Evin after two men were out, and before the boys tightened up 3 runs crossed the plate.

Summary of score: R H E Moose 7 0 0 2 2 2 0 0 7 7 4 Woodmen 0 0 0 0 0 3 0 0 3 3 4

Batteries for Moose, Hart, Benn; for Woodmen, Frazer, Brower. 2 base hits, Barton, Niles, Hart. Struck out by Frazer 5, by Hart 5. Umpire, McElwain.

Maine's Potato Crop

According to statistics given out by the Department of Agriculture at Washington, the Maine potato crop for 1913 will be considerably in excess of that of the other potato growing states on a percentage basis.

The average yield for the United States is estimated at 78 per cent, while Maine is credited with having a crop of 92 per cent, which is larger than any other state except Oregon whose percentage is 98 and Washington whose estimate is 92 per cent.

The figures given are as of Aug. 1, and while they only approximate the yield the season is so well along now that they may allow of little variance.

New England as a section will produce a larger crop than last year. New Hampshire's crop will be slightly less, Vermont somewhat larger, Massachusetts 5 per cent, smaller and Rhode Island about the same.

The total acreage this year is 99.3 per cent, of last year or 3,685,000 acres. It is estimated that this year's yield run 92 bushels to the acre, or 389,000,000 bushels compared with 113.4 bushels to the acre and 421,000,000 bushels total in 1912, final; 293,000,000 bushels in 1911, final; 389,000,000 in 1909, census; and a general average of 96.1 bushels per acre for the five years, 1908-1912, inclusive.

It will be seen that this year's crop Aug. 1, promised 82,000,000 less than last year's final yield, which was a very big crop and 46,000,000 bushels more than the final production in 1911.

SYNOPSIS

Anthony Hamilton Hawthorne with $100,000 won at Monte Carlo visits Borrowvina, a little Balkan kingdom, where he falls in love with the king's daughter, Princess Irma. Against her will she is engaged to Prince Valdimir.

Hawthorne seizes a man who fires at the king and princess. The princess is taken to a hotel uninjured and cared for by Senator Ballard and his daughter Kate.

Later Hawthorne tells the king the prince is conspiring to dethrone him, but is ordered from the palace. More evidence of the plot is found when Hawthorne catches the prince and confederates planning a movement to seize the throne. Hawthorne is caught listening.

The prince attempts to kill Hawthorne and his friend Blake. The ceiling caves in, burying the prince and his quarry, Radulski. Hawthorne and Blake, escaping, go with a newspaper reporter to a drinking place. The prince bursts in on them and orders them to jail.

CHAPTER VI.

The Crisis.

WHEN the dust died away and the prince found that the two Americans had escaped he was insane with anger.

"Get me out of here! Get me out of here!" he yelled.

"We can't do a thing until the men arrive with the axes," explained the landlord. "You're pinned in tight, and it would seriously injure your highness to attempt to pull you out."

"Would it though?" hissed the prince. "I'll seriously injure you when I get out of here. You know the condition of this building. Why didn't you warn us. You're a fine subject. To jail with you!"

"But, your highness!" pleaded the poor landlord, who felt that the damage sustained to his building ought to prove sufficient punishment for him.

"Take him away," the prince commanded to two guards who had escaped the falling timbers. "I'll teach him to have better protection for the princes of his country after this."

"Where are those Americans?" was his next demand.

"Gone," came the reply from one of the guards.

"What! You men get busy and find them or I'll have your heads before night!"

For nearly an hour three husky woodmen chopped away at the heavy timber that imprisoned their prince. Once released, he took two detachments of the guards and went in search of the Americans.

"Scout the woods," he ordered to one detachment.

"Come with me," was the order to the second.

Nearly fifty buildings had been searched before the prince and his guardmen came to the tap room. The keeper bowed as the prince entered.

"Seen any strangers hereabouts?" demanded the prince.

"No, your highness," answered the keeper.

"He's lying," commented the prince.

"Take him outside and beat him until he tells the truth."

"Oh, don't do that, your highness. For the sake of my family don't put me to such punishment. The shock would kill me."

"Then tell me the truth."

It was then that the shivering keeper nodded to the room in the rear of the tavern.

There was no wild scramble on the part of the guards in the direction indicated by the tavernkeeper. The guards had apparently learned of the unpleasant experience their comrades had had with these same Americans but a few hours before in the casino.

"What's holding you back?" demanded the prince. "Are you all cowards? Do you expect me to go in there single handed?"

"No, your highness, but—" ventured a sergeant.

"No 'buts.' Come!" was his command.

On tiptoes the guards and the prince made their way to the room in the rear. There they stopped, while the prince, with his ear to the keyhole, listened.

"Now," said the prince.

And with that the guards forced themselves against the door, and it fell crashing to the floor inside. So quickly was it all done that the two Americans and the newspaper man found themselves held fast by the guards before they had time to realize what had happened. The prince, standing near the door, exclaimed:

"So you're caught like a lot of rats in a trap conspiring against the government, eh! And you, scribe, needn't worry about your job, for that went long ago. You got it right that time, all right, Mr. Hawthorne. It was a splendid suggestion, and within a few hours his paper will be telling its readers all about our little movement for the uplift of the people, and of how a few hours later we burst in upon you three conspiring to overthrow the government."

Hawthorne and Blake were doing their best to break away from their captors, but they were completely overpowered.

"You snake!" was all that Hawthorne could say.

Then he suddenly burst into laughter. By this time the prince's fury had about reached all bounds.

"Say," said Hawthorne, for the first time realizing that he had blacked one of the prince's eyes in the conflict at the casino.

"If there's anything funnier than your looks in the next world I don't care how quickly I go there."

"Take them away," ordered the prince.

Now, the guards were only too anxious to obey that order if they could do it without any bodily injury to themselves. But they also realized that so long as the arms and legs of their captives were restrained merely by human effort some one was in danger of being killed. So post haste a number of the guards went in search of heavy rope and chain, while about twenty held the two captives to the floor so that they couldn't play any tricks. The newspaper man was allowed only two guards, for it was very apparent that he didn't care to take issue on the merits of his capture.

While the guards were searching for rope the angry prince stood about and cursed at Blake and Hawthorne. Finally, when he found that he could bring nothing but smiles from his prisoners, he went stamping out of the room leaving the Americans in charge of the guards.

When the rope arrived they were bound up with as many knots as Borrowvian ingenuity would permit. Then the two were loaded on to a dray and hauled to the jail. The newspaper man was allowed the privilege of walking.

Once inside the jail they were placed in separate cells. They didn't know just how long they were scheduled to wait, but Hawthorne had come to a very decisive conclusion that he was going to be out of there in time to prevent the attack on the palace even if he had to do the herculean trick of pushing down the walls of the jail.

For a long time the only sound that came to Hawthorne's ears was the monotonous pounding of the guard who was walking up and down outside. Later came the rattling of chains, and in walked the prince, puffing and blustering. He seemed careful to stay more than reaching distance from the barred door on Hawthorne's cell.

"Welcome little ray of sunshine," was Hawthorne's greeting.

"The prince was unable to reply. He just frothed at the mouth."

"If it isn't good for sore eyes to see you again," said Hawthorne, who refused to let his good nature leave him. "I suppose you've dismissed two or three regiments of your soldiers now that you have my friend and I locked in here."

"No, I haven't, but I'll let you in on a little secret. I've picked out six of the crack shots of the army, and tomorrow at 9 o'clock they are going to have a little practice with you as a target."

"Great!" said Hawthorne.

"The first one will try to see that his bullet goes through your heart. In case he should miss, why, the second will try."

"Yes, prince," said Hawthorne. "But have you thought of what might happen in case the whole six missed me?"

"There was no answer forthcoming to that, but in a little while, when the prince regained his power of speech, he said:

"There is one way you can avoid being a target."

"How's that—by killing myself, is it?"

"No. You're a lot of money, haven't you?"

"Have I?"

"Well, haven't you?"

"Who told you?" asked Hawthorne, this time just a little bit nervous.

"One of the papers came out today and said that you were a millionaire from America over here looking for excitement."

"Well," laughed Hawthorne, "I don't know about the truth of the financial end of that story, but the excitement end is all true. I'm looking for it and I'm finding it in abundance."

"If you have this coin," said the prince, ignoring Hawthorne's attempt at facetiousness, "we can probably arrange your release. If you have no money you'll have to die."

"How about my friends?"

"They'll die with you, and if you produce the money they will be allowed to live."

"No one will ever accuse you of not being generous," said Hawthorne. "Now, just let me tell you something! If I had that money you wouldn't get it! You don't dare kill me, as a matter of fact, and even if you dared you couldn't do it by the plan you propose, for there isn't a man in the army could aim his gun straight enough."

"This is final," demanded the prince.

"Absolutely!" replied Hawthorne.

"Then you and your friends die in the morning for conspiring against Borrowvina."

With that the prince took his leave.

Then Hawthorne set himself down to some real serious thinking. Whether he died in the morning or not was a proposition that could be taken care of later. The immediate subject under consideration was whether he could get out in time to prevent the attack on the palace.

"The guard," thought Hawthorne to himself, "I wonder how well he loves his country?"

"Hist! Hist!" was the signal that brought the guard alongside of his cell shortly after the departure of the prince.

"How well do you like money?" asked Hawthorne.

"Pretty well," said the guard.

"What would it take to get me out of here?"

The guard looked around to make sure that he was safe in talking.

"I'll tell you," said the guard. "I'm an Englishman, and so is the guard at the big gate. Now, if you could let the two of us have enough to get us back home I think we could safely call it square."

"How would five hundred strike you?"

"Five hundred?" exclaimed the guard. "Why, we'd come pretty near scuttling a ship for such a sum of money."

"Then it's yours," said Hawthorne.

An hour later Hawthorne and Blake were on their way to the palace. The newspaper man was left in prison, for the Americans didn't think it would be safe to have him out until after they had won the confidence of the king.

The king sat in his private study at the palace late that evening. With him were De Witz and the chancellor. An air of unrest pervaded the whole palace. The king alone was unmoved. "How Hawthorne arrived got?" he asked, glancing up from some papers on his desk.

"No, sire," replied De Witz.

"Hm! The commander in chief of the army ignores his king's summons? And the life guards? Have they been released from Maxovitz as I ordered?"

"I am afraid not, sire, or they should have been here by now."

"Then," calmly decided the king, "that young American's warning was well founded, it seems. Valdimir plans a revolution. And Hawthorne and the army are behind him. It only remains to learn when and how they intend to strike. Ah, Irma!" he broke off as the princess stole into the room. "What brings you home so late, little girl?"

"I hardly know, sire," she answered. "I was awakened and I saw a man, I don't know who, in the doorway."

"What did he look like?"

"I don't know, sire, but I could see his eyes and his teeth. He looked like a devil."

"What did he say?"

"He said, 'I'm looking for excitement and I'm finding it in abundance.'"

"What a strange man!"

"Yes, sire, but I don't think he is a devil. He looks like a man who knows what he is doing."

"What do you think he is?"

"I don't know, sire, but I think he is a man who knows what he is doing."

Keep Your Blood Cool

by Right Kind of Food and Enjoy Hot Weather

It's largely a matter of selecting the hot weather diet with reason.

Summer is Nature's season of activity—seed-time, growing-time, harvest-time—a time of expansion, energy—and Man is influenced to do his part to put forth greater effort because activity is in the very air.

BUT—caution is necessary to avoid excessive heat from combustion (digestion) of heavy greasy food, (Nature's way of generating body-heat in winter) in addition to the heat of the summer atmosphere.

GRAPE-NUTS

is the Ideal Food for hot weather because, being largely predigested (and concentrated) in the making at the factory, it is quickly absorbed, a small quantity affording great endurance with little effort in digesting it.

Grape-Nuts, made of Whole Wheat and Barley, contains all the natural elements of these cereals, including the phosphate of potash grown in the grain for rebuilding waste tissue cells, especially of brain and nerves.

Try for breakfast, lunch or supper:—

A Little Fruit; Saucer of Grape-Nuts and Cream; A Soft Boiled Egg; Slice of Crisp Toast, and a Cup of Postum, hot or iced with sugar and lemon.

Surprising how cool, yet full of healthy energy and "go" one feels on such a meal no matter what the weather.

Good News for Travelers.

Taking effect Sept. 1, 1913, the Maine Central railroad will issue a 500-mile mileage book, good in Maine, at the rate of 2 1/2 cents a mile or $11.25 a book. The announcement of the placing on sale of the books comes in a letter to Governor Haines from George S. Hobbs, general manager of the Maine Central railroad, in reply to a letter from the governor dated Aug. 15 in which he explains why the act providing for a 500-mile book did not receive passage at the last legislature and asking, now that the referendum has been ordered on the public utilities bill to provide the public with the books.

In his reply to Gov. Haines, Mr. Hobbs grants the request and tells why the road is compelled to charge 2 1/2 cents a mile for the books, basing his claims on the grounds that the passenger train service is not at the present times self-supporting and that the road could not afford the present rate of mileage ticket books. He declared the amount of passenger traffic light compared with the other roads issuing the 500-mile books. The placing on sale of the books will fill a long felt want in the state, especially among the traveling public.

Reputation.
After a man has made a reputation it is the trying to decorate it that generally gets him into trouble.—Puck
